Every Housewife Should Have a Copy

By Mrs. Janet McKenzie Hill, Editor of the Boston Cooking School Magazine

The Cook's Book has been prepared at a cost of many thousands of dollars, in the interest of better and healthier cooking. It shows the way to reduce the cost of living, containing as it does over 90 thoroughly tested, tried and proven recipes that will be successful every time, if the few simple directions are followed.

This is truly a wonderful book, showing as it does in hundreds of ways how to lighten the good housewife's burdens and solving her problems successfully. It really must be seen to be appreciated, for the recipes are illustrated in natural colors. Those who have seen it, immediately say: "It's the best Cook Book I've ever seen"—and you will too.

You can secure a copy of this valuable book absolutely free by attaching the colored certificate packed in 25-cent cans of K C Baking Powder to this advertisement, sending both to the JAGUES MFG. CO., Chicago, Ill. Write your name and address plainly.

HUDSPETH TO FIGHT THE TARIFF CHANGE

With Capt. Crouch, He Will Represent the Texas Wool Growers.

San Antonio, Tex., May 1.—State senator C. B. Hudspeth, of El Paso, and captain Crouch of Corpus Christi, will leave San Antonio Tuesday for Washington, where they will represent wool growers of Texas in the effort of the latter to prevent a change in the wool tariff detrimental to their interests.

Captain Charles Schreiner of Kerrville, one of the most prominent wool growers in the state spent yesterday in the city and sent messages to Mr. Hudspeth and captain Crouch, asking them to meet in this city and start early May 2. While it will be their work to prevent, if possible, a change in schedule K, the wool section of the Payne-Adams tariff, which would work harm to the industry in Texas, the growers of this state will not object to having the duty on wool lowered a few cents, said captain Schreiner. Personally, he said, he would like to see the duty reduced three or four cents, which would put it at a figure just to everybody concerned.

In the hearings before committees which are expected to result from proposals to change various sections of the tariff the Texas cattle raisers will be represented as well as the wool growers. President Ed C. Laster of the cattlemen's organization and S. H. Cowan, its attorney, have already gone to Washington to appear before the finance committee of the senate. Senator Claude B. Hudspeth will leave Monday evening for Washington to appear before the house committee of commerce as a representative of the wool growers of Texas, when schedule "K" of the proposed tariff is under consideration. Senator Hudspeth will also take an active part in obtaining the passage of the bill appropriating $50,000 for the enlargement of the El Paso federal building.

Mutt and Jeff are with us. Another appearance today on Classified page. Every day in The Herald hereafter.

TO CLOUDROFT WEDNESDAY. The Cloudcroft excursion will leave El Paso Wednesday and return Thursday on a special train.

MY DAUGHTER WAS CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Baltimore, Md.—"I send you here with the picture of my fifteen year old daughter Alice, who was restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was pale, with dark circles under her eyes, weak and irritable. Two different doctors treated her and called it Green Sickness, but she grew worse all the time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended, and after taking three bottles she has regained her health, thanks to your medicine. I can recommend it for all female troubles."—Mrs. L. A. CORKRAN, 1103 Rutland Street, Baltimore, Md.

Hundreds of such letters from mothers expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Young Girls, Heed This Advice. Girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, headache, dizziness, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should take immediate action and be restored to health by Lydia E. THE CASH INTRIGUE

BY GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

Copyright, 1909, By the BOBBS MERRILL CO.

"Well, with about 10,000 distributing agents, each one instructed to remit in currency only, it would be very strange if there were not a leak. Doubtless a host of people other than myself know of it, but the individual amounts were so small that no one paid any attention."

"That's precisely it," insisted Rollins. "It remained for you to appreciate and take advantage of the enormous possibilities of the thing, to understand its magnitude in the aggregate. You are a great man, Mr. Kelvin. You have been selling all the time, haven't you?"

"Every morning," admitted Phillip, smiling.

"You must have an enormous account by this time."

"Close to 700,000 shares," confessed Phillip.

"And you held back your explanation of all this until you had acquired all you wanted? I thought so. Well, it's an ill wind that blows nobody any good. I will want some railroad shares, I suppose you realize what a calamity you are going to bring on the country?"

"I think I do," and Phillip's jaws closed with a snap.

Rollins looked at him in slightly disapproving speculation.

"Gad," he said. "Some of the big men here have been pirates, but you will be the most ruthless wrecker who ever got into Wall street."

"No," returned Phillip, with a curious smile. "You have read me wrong. I am not a pirate. I am a reformer."

"I see," concluded Rollins—"in the same manner that the inquisition reformed the heretics."

"I decline to be interviewed," declared Phillip. "Are you going uptown?"

At the Esplanade Kelvin found Rensselaer. "You are the only chap on my list who knows a lot of the newspaper crowd. I have an item for them, and I don't want to give it out myself."

He told Rensselaer what had transpired at the dinner. Rensselaer clapped him on the back and laughed loud and long.

"The newspapers will eat that story!" he declared. "It's a wonderful thing! Great Scott, man, how many shares are you short?"

"About 700,000."

"Then every point drop means $700,000 to you. This will send the line down thirty points. Let me figure a minute. Why, that's $21,000,000!"

"I figure on a little bit more than that," returned Kelvin dryly. "But don't let that distress you any, Bert."

"You might have given a fellow a tip," complained Rensselaer.

"How much money have you?"

"A little over $2,000 of my own," replied Rensselaer, "but I can get hold of $10,000 more."

"Do you know any way that you can place your $12,000 on the London market in the morning?"

"I think I can. Me for it!" said Rensselaer, jumping up. "Watch me make the sidewalk smoke." At the door, however, he paused. "And just to think," he said, "that all this glittering opportunity comes about through old Henry Breed! Why, I have an aunt out at Forest Lakes, a guest of Breed's, she calls herself, but she's a guest for pay and is a sort of bear leader for the fair Lillian. She would be above taking money for coaching Lillian and afterward inducing her into society, but she's not above letting Breed handle her investments of a paltry $10,000 on a guaranteed return of 100 per cent."

"If you want to get those selling orders away you had better hurry," suggested Kelvin, looking at his watch. "I have an idea that the cables will be loaded with just such messages before morning."

Shortly after midnight Kelvin was awakened by the ringing of his telephone bell, and from then on until morning he was kept busy answering calls from the various newspaper offices. He gave them all the information he could. They besieged him for news, for photographs, for the story of his life, and in the morning, having given out all the information he had at hand, he was compelled to go to another hotel incognito to escape the reporters. He had brought to him all the morning papers and read with smiles the mass of naive exaggerations. He was the shrewdest man that had ever come into Wall street. He was a combination of all the great financiers in America, from Vanderbilt to Harriman. He had sold short anywhere from 1,000,000 to 10,000,000 shares of stock. His age ranged from sixteen to sixty, his complexion from blood to brunette and his character from a humming bird's to a vampire's. About only two things was there no disagreement—he had conducted his commendable transactions with real money, and Henry Breed, whose greed had made this possible, was the most profound scoundrel of the century!

While he was still reading these accounts the Stock Exchange opened, and it opened with a rush, with practically every trader on the floor wanting to sell and few wanting to buy. Within five minutes of the opening the place was a pandemonium, and he had to be a Hercules who held buying orders. The peculiar part of the movement was that it started simultaneously in nearly every trading group upon the floor. Men with orders to sell 5,000 shares of U. P. would no sooner execute that commission than they would plunge into the Steel Common group with equal frenzy. Men with orders to wait for a price belloyed in sheer nervousness. It was a roaring, shrieking, cursing hell, in which clothing was rent and men fought like ferocious dogs for a mere glance from a man who had buying orders.

By 3 o'clock every security listed on the Stock Exchange had dropped twenty points a share. Many of them had gone still lower. That afternoon the private dining rooms of all the exclusive cafes were filled with grave men, certain groups planning to go with the movement and others, more far seeing, devising ways and means to stem the oncoming tide.

Pellman took a train to Forest Lakes, the country home of Henry Breed. The six biggest railroad operators in the street had decided that if any man could influence Breed Pellman was the man. Pellman himself was dubious. He had once angered Breed; but for that matter, Breed had engaged in some quarrel or other with every man in the market.

Pellman approached Forest Lakes with a confidence that diminished as he came in sight of Breed's immense estate.

At the great iron gates a grizzled old woodsman with a gun took Pellman's card through the grill and, stepping inside a small lodge, telephoned to the house. He came out in a few moments.

"Mr. Breed is ill," he said. "The doctor has forbidden him to see any one."

"Is the doctor in the house?" asked Pellman.

"Yes, sir."

Pellman proffered a bill. "Telephone the doctor that I would like to see him."

"All right, sir," said the gatekeeper and turned slowly away, but he did not touch the money. He was gone about five minutes. "Dr. Zephan says that you may come up to the house," he announced upon his return.

Pellman frowned as the big gates swung open, admitting his limousine. At the door an almost decrepit servant, not in livery, ushered him into a dim old parlor, where rusty horsehair furniture bulged and crinkled with the everlasting dampness. There was a rustle of silk in the hall, and a girl of about twenty stopped for a moment in the door. She was of unusual beauty, dark haired and dark eyed, with a certain quick, lithe movement that told of nervous energy gone riot for want of outlet. For just a moment she stood, a startling figure in her semi-faded house gown of wood brown silk; then she moved swiftly away, and her place in the doorway was taken by Dr. Zephan.

"Dr. Zephan?" asked Pellman, rising.

"I am, sir," replied the other, with a bare trace of foreign accent. "You wish to see Mr. Breed?"

"On a matter of the greatest importance."

"Impossible," declared the doctor. "It is not only my orders, but his own, that no one be admitted on any exciting errand."

Pellman considered a few moments in silence.

"Is he able to talk at all?" he asked.

"Yes," admitted the other, and for a fleeting instant Pellman thought that he had detected a twinkle in Zephan's eye.

"Then I must see him," insisted Pellman. "We are in the throes of a national calamity!"

He held out to Zephan a copy of an afternoon paper, aflame with the terror of the withdrawal of currency from circulation, with the panic of the morning, with dire prophecy for the future.

"Mr. Breed is in no fit condition to talk over such matters," said the doctor.

"He must be in condition," insisted Pellman. "Mr. Breed alone could stop this."

Zephan turned suddenly and strode to the door across the hall. "Come in," he invited.

Pellman followed him into a great dim library. Near the window, but facing the fire, sat the remarkable man who by his ingenuity and enterprise had built up the most enormous business in the world and who through it had gained control of not less than one-third of the capitalized industries of the United States. He breathed Pellman's name and gave him a limp, fish cold hand.

"I suppose you have heard, Breed," began Pellman, "that a panic has broken loose today?"

Breed shook his head. "No, I had not," said he.

"It has. Today is but the mild beginning of it, but we fellows who have been through it know precisely what is to follow. By tomorrow the country will be crazy, and there is no telling where the ruin will end."

Breed merely nodded.

"The entire board has gone down twenty points or more today. From the temper of the street I look for all stocks to make a new low record."

Breed nodded. Pellman began to breathe hard, a sign that his temper was rising. He had been unable to arouse the slightest trace of interest in Breed.

"Cereal stocks have suffered more than any of them," he had said. This shot. The cereal stocks had originated with Breed himself. To Pellman's intense disgust Breed only nodded as one who had heard a pleasing tale.

"Look here, Breed," exclaimed Pellman. "You are going to ruin all the business interests in the country. You are going to break banks, stop factories and cause untold misery, even starvation—wholesale starvation, worse than this country has ever known! What are you going to do about it?"

"Nothing," quavered Breed. "It is none of my affair."

LAS CRUCES TEACHERS TO VISIT EL PASO SCHOOLS.

Las Cruces, N. M., May 1.—During the present vacation the teachers of the Las Cruces schools are planning to visit El Paso and study the methods used in the public schools of the Pass City. A number of them will go down tomorrow and Prof. J. H. Wagner, the superintendent, will leave on Thursday and spend two or three days in the southwestern metropolis.

School will not again be held here until all danger from the present scarlet fever scare is over. All of the cases, the having been about 16 reported during the past six weeks, are under control and improving and no fear is entertained of any serious spread of the disease. Every precaution possible has been taken by the physicians and the town authorities, and the fact that no new cases are being reported is a good indication that the threatened epidemic is a thing of the past.

START WORK ON A WATER GARDEN AT THE COLLEGE.

Las Cruces, N. M., May 1.—Dr. O. H. Brown, the contractor, is now at the Agricultural college with a force of men and teams ready to start work upon the new water garden which is to be made from the basement of the old main building which burned last fall. A cement bottom will be built after the basement is cleaned out to the required depth, and cement walls will be constructed at the sides and ends. This pool will then be filled with water from the college pumping plant and water plants and water fowl placed therein.

TUBERCULOSIS DAY IS OBSERVED IN LAS CRUCES.

Las Cruces, N. M., May 1.—The pastors of the various churches in this vicinity devoted yesterday to a sermon dealing with tuberculosis. April 30 having been named as Tuberculosis day in New Mexico, through the efforts of the New Mexico Society for the Prevention and Study of Tuberculosis, which society is doing good work in its efforts to systematically fight the white plague and control the same in this territory.

LAS CRUCES MINOR HAPPENINGS.

Las Cruces, N. M., May 1.—Vincent B. May, county school superintendent, accompanied by Mrs. May, will leave this week for an extended eastern trip, going to New York by way of New Orleans.

Henry D. Bowman, president of the Bowman Bank and Trust company, of this city, left today for New York City, where he will spend two or three weeks. He will attend the banquet of the trust companies of the United States, which will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in the eastern metropolis.

A large crowd of the Agricultural college students spent Saturday at Van Patten's dripping springs resort in the Organ mountains, returning by midnight the event of the week.

Oscar Snow, Percy Barker and Frank Hayner were given the master Mason degree in the local blue lodge this evening.

Prof. J. H. Squires, agronomist at the New Mexico Agricultural college, has handed in his resignation and will leave some time this month for the east, where he will enter commercial business life.

EMPSON'S COLORADO

SUGAR PEAS

the sweetest, tenderest, and most palatable peas imaginable; the result of sunshine and ever ready irrigation—mountain snow. From the vines into cans and sealed within an hour. And fresh as a daisy.

Has Fifteen Children; Saves $26,500

Fourteen of the fifteen children and their father, Frederick Schneider, who, despite his large family, saved $26,500 before coming to this country as an emigrant from Russia. Arriving in New York on the George Washington, the immigration authorities on Ellis Island examined him, his wife and the 14 children and then asked to be shown his share of this world's goods. Unbattling his three top coats, the Russian drew forth from an inside pocket five rolls of bills and proceeded to count them. As he peeled off $10 bills, the eyes of the immigration inspector bulged with excitement. Schneider kept on. A thousand dollars were soon counted off, but he had not got to the end of one roll. When he paused and took a breath as he passed the $10,000 mark, work was suspended in the baggage room and the employees of the department of commerce and labor were g
